CUMBS TO ATTACK OF HEART TROUBLE.

Capt. W. H. Hutchinson, city street superintendent, and a citizen of prominence for many years, passed away suddenly yesterday shortly after the noon hour at his home on East Gregory street, death being due to an attack of heart trouble, following a short illness of la grippe. The deceased had been a resident of Pensacola for the past forty-five years, and during this period had served the county as sheriff and the city as mayor, in addition to holding other positions of public trust.

Capt. Hutchinson was a veteran of the civil war, being among the first to answer Jefferson Davis's call for troops to defend the Confederacy. His daring and courage earned for him a peculiar place in the esteem of his commanders and while yet in his teens, he served as a confidential and secret scout for the Confederacy, undergoing many hair-breadth escapes in the cause of his country.

Death came suddenly to Capt. Hutchinson, although he had been in poor health for about a month, a part of which time he was incapacitated for his duties as street superintendent. His first attack was acute indigestion, which terminated in complications. But while having been confined to his room for several days, he appeared much better yesterday and a short time before his death, he was able to be in the yard. After returning to his bed he died almost instantly.

Eventful Career.

Capt. Hutchinson had an eventful career. From the time of his enlistment in the Confederate army, at the age of sixteen years, until his death, his life has been an active one. His activities had extended in the military, commercial and official circles of his nation, state and city.

The deceased was a native of Prattville, Ala., being a son of the late Thomas W. Hutchinson. At the outbreak of the civil war, he was but sixteen years of age and a student in an Alabama military academy. But despite his young age he answered his country's first call and enlisted in company "K," First Alabama, U. C. V. With the organization of his company, owing to his peculiar qualities of leadership and experience in military matters he was promoted to the position of first lieutenant, in which rank he served throughout the war.

Soon after the close of the war Capt. Hutchinson came to Pensacola and cast his lot with the then struggling little city and entered business as a commission merchant. Later he entered the merchandise business and became one of the leading clothing merchants of Pensacola. Still later he became connected with the fish industry, but in the hurricane, which visited this place about four years ago, he lost practically his entire fortune. Two years ago he was chosen superintendent of streets, his commission expiring this coming June.

Capt. Hutchinson throughout his forty-five years residence in Pensacola took a deep and active interest in
